NOT ALL HAPPY.

Written for the Mail.
Once more has Christmas come and gone and some are melancholy.
Just when one might suppose that everybody would be happy.
It really is too bad that good old Santa Claus expects us.
To warmly thank him for the things he ought to know would vex us.

The man who would not read a line for either love or money.
Received a dozen looks or more, and what is just funny.
The student who is anxious to increase his fund of learning.
Did not get a single book for which his soul was yearning.

A box of fine cigars was sent—it really is provoking.
To tempt the poor, unhappy youth who recently quit smoking.
The man whose feet are number nine got slippers number seven.
While those for him who wears a tiny shoe are marked eleven.

The woman whose complexion is the type they say is "floral."
A bright red lipstick got that makes her look "just lost!"
The boy who down upon his lip as soft as baby lips.
Secured a china cup designed for one who has mustaches.

And so it is that lots of folks to-day are sadly moping.
Because they failed to get the things for which they all have longed.
But while some frown at what they got and some are smiling sweetly.
The number one of all is he who was left out completely.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Thin Fabrics for Evening—Irish Poplin.
Accessories—Opera Cloaks—The Psyche Knot.
Special Correspondence of the Intelligencer.

New York, Dec. 28.—White India muslin with broad stripes of colored embroidery in floral patterns seem like fresh importations from Fairyland; so sheer and glistening the foundation; so like the coloring of the leaves, grasses and flowers. Costumes of this exquisite material are of plain muslin, fine as a silk web, and lined with delicate pink, blue or white silk, the flower stripes are cut into lengths, and used as trimmings in various ways; sometimes bordering the skirt, or perhaps as a panel, but always put on plainly. The same fabric in black grounds and stripes of subdued colors is also beautiful, but most appropriate for middle-aged persons who cannot safely indulge in the luxury of delicate hues. Another charming novelty is self-colored silk muslin, forty-six inches wide, at $4 per yard, in pale blue, pink, maize and heliotrope, embroidered in an "all over" pattern of a single small grape leaf, about three inches apart, the intervening space filled up with curling tendrils. The richness of these muslins admits of no accessories beyond lace or ribbon, with silk linings of the same shade throughout. Other evening fabrics are grenadine gauzes, Japanese and "ribbed crepe" in all stylish evening shades; white or black drapery net, sparkling with gold braid and colored pearl beads, these last at the modest figure of $65 to $80 a single front breadth.

LESS EXPENSIVE

Evening dresses are in light-weight cashmere, henrietta, crepon and India or China silk. The variety and beauty of the two last mentioned materials constitute a world in themselves, certainly possessing the great advantage of being available during successive seasons. Crape dresses in white, Nile green, pink or blue, are charming for young girls, made with round waists and chiffon frills across the front, caught up on the shoulder by ribbon bows, short basques showing a point back and front are much in vogue for thin fabrics, and silk with an intermixture of lace is a pretty substitute for chiffon. Sleeves are oftentimes bunchings of chiffon confined by ribbon bows, and it would appear as if colored velvet; chiffon or ribbon could not be out of place. Rosettes, tufts and long loop bows of ribbon are much employed, and nothing is so popular as the "Fair and Square" ribbon, not only from its superior quality, but also from the fact that its numerous fancy edges are so well adapted to ornamental purposes; especially the "loop edge" which is almost a combination of lace and ribbon. In heavy materials, "cable cord" bengaline is the latest variety of that much favored fabric; for expensive wedding dresses and opera cloaks its simplicity and elegance are strong attractions. Many handsome dinner, reception and New Year costumes are of Irish poplin, trimmed with a combination of lace and fur, or passementerie; girdles with pendants falling to the knee are not an unusual addition.

IN THE WAY

of accessories, jet gimp, velvet, chiffon, lace or ribbon play an important part, as after all, it is the finishing touches that constitute the ensemble. Chiffon, the one material excepting lace, which is suitable to all ages—enhancing youthful charms and softening the traces of time, still holds undisputed sway; so easily twisted into graceful combinations with lace or ribbon, and resembling a soft, vapory mass, when shirred, puffed or frilled at fashion's caprice. The newest jabots are so large as to conceal the waist front, and one style has a deep frill of colored chiffon edged with wide Point de Gaze lace, gathered to a shirred collar band which fastens at the back. Sometimes the jabot is formed of two deep frills, both finished with lace; the color faintly seen through the lace on the upper frill producing a very pretty effect. Hemstitching is in great favor for handkerchiefs, with frequent finish of lace that may run up to extravagant figures. The lace border has indeed superseded embroidery, and belles returned from abroad, especially from England, scent their fingerings with the delightful Highland Heather perfume that is a rage in our mother country, and likely to become so on this side.

OPERA CLOAKS

and light-colored cloaks for evening wear are in considerable variety regarding size and material, some being nothing more than a medium sized cape, while others envelop the figure completely. Very elegant wraps are of rich white silk, showing interwoven figures or floral designs in raised gilt, and bordered with marabout feathers. Others equally handsome are in heavy corded silk, or broadened bengaline, lined with white mandarin lamb. Small white matelasse capes, without sleeves and edged around the neck and down the front with Thibet fur, are brought out for young girls, also light-colored cloth capes lined and trimmed with fur. Elegant long cloaks are a combination of white matelasse and colored plush, with high collar and long white passementerie pendants falling over the shoulders and down the front. Crimson cloth, strown with gilt figures and combined with black plush and feather trimming, makes a handsome, rich-looking cloak for an elderly person; preference, however, is usually given to white or very delicate hues.

THE TUSNYE KNOT

consists of a small puff standing out from the head, with two coils of hair wound closely around it. The bang is very small, and the remaining front hair is waved and carried back to the knot, which is high upon the head, while the low back hair is also waved and brought up to the knot.

FANNIE FIELDS.

American Steel for American Ships.
New York Herald.

The adoption of a settled naval policy by our government has been one of the most important factors in the present marvellous development of the steel industry in this country. The rigorous tests so wisely imposed by the Navy Steel Board have forced the Carnegie interests, the Bethlehem company, the Carbon Iron Company, of Pittsburgh, and other great producers to find, by scientific research and tireless experiment, modes of manufacture adequate to the requirements demanded.

With that power of adaptation to new circumstances so characteristic of our national genius, the American steel makers are now furnishing a material for ships and structural purposes and for armor which is unequalled. Native steel is used also for the armament, whether it be in the enormous armor-piercing calibres or in the rapid fire guns, which, by their sustained intensity of fire, count for so much in modern warfare.

In the new vessels authorized the Carnegie interests are furnishing the metal for two battle ships and two cruisers, and the Carbon Iron company the steel needed in one battle ship and two cruisers. Among these two last is that wonderful cruiser, now known as Number Thirteen, which Mr. Tracy says will, in performance, have no peer in any service afloat.

Eyes and Ears

have we that we may see and hear; brains that we may reason and understand; so there's little excuse for much of the suffering that is tolerated. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is this exquisite material are of plain muslin, fine as a silk web, and lined with delicate pink, blue or white silk, the flower stripes are cut into lengths, and used as trimmings in various ways; sometimes bordering the skirt, or perhaps as a panel, but always put on plainly.
